D. Presentations to Council
   (10 minutes, 5 minutes for questions)

- Emergency Fund report

Presenters: VP Academic and External, and AcEx Committee representative.

- At October Council meeting AcEx Committee was asked to report to Council on the GSS Emergency Fund usage;
- Fund has existed for almost 10 years;
- Meant to be a fund of last resort and to ensure students close to completion can finish degree;
- Applications are confidential and undergo through a multi-step evaluation process.
- All applicants must provide documents to demonstrate financial need;
- Applications are processed by Advocacy officers and presented to AcEx Committee which makes decision on whether to grant request;
- In 2011/12 and 2012/13 budget was $12,000; 2013/14 and 2014/15 budget was only $8,000. Actual spending was less than budgeted amount in all of those years. In October 2014 Council increased budget by $4,000, total at $12,000.
- UBC GSS is one of only 3 student societies in the U15 to have emergency funding program fully funded from the Society's budget; most others receive significant institutional funding.
- Presented series of discussion points: maximum grant amount, application schedule, fixed awards, loan vs. grant and the potential external funding sources.
It was asked the number of applications throughout the existence of the Emergency Fund, to which the answer was that over the years a number of applications kept increasing. It was further remarked that there is no full statistical data available for the past 4 years, only the record of the award amounts and no records of the rejected applications.

It was further asked whether there is any academic merit during the evaluation process, to which the answer was that the academic supervisor of an applicant has to sign off the document that the graduate student is in a good standing and close to completion.

It was further asked and answered that the Emergency Fund is not currently advertised as it is meant to be a last resort fund. It was further noted that there is no certain position whether this Fund should be advertised or not.

It was further asked whether there was an initiative to find an external funding, to which the answer was that after search done in this direction, it was found that AMS and SFU have been receiving government funding for their emergency programs.

It was further asked and answered that at the end of the budget year any extra unused funds go back to GSS.

WHEREAS at the GSS Council Retreat it was indicated by Councillors that the GSS should put more of an emphasis on the graduate student career development programs and initiatives;

WHEREAS the GSS donated $1000 to the 3MT competition in 2014;

MOVER: Daniel Wood  SECONDER: Kreso Sola

It was asked and answered that the funds are moved from the Executive Conference & Travel budget line to Donations’ line for 3MT competition.

It was further asked whether GSS will be informed how funds are used, to which the answer was that the donation goes towards the prizes and travel expense for a UBC 3MT winner going to a regional or higher-level of the 3MT competition.

J. Other Business and Notice of Motions

K. Discussion Period

- Emergency Fund

Mary-Anne: Concerned that some departments might know about the fund and others might not due to lack of advertising. How can we be sure that all grad students know about this?
Daniel: Applications go to Ac/Ex in anonymous fashion, we don’t know which departments applicants come from. We’ve debated advertising many times, but always reach the conclusion that it should not be advertised.
Tahara: Had never heard of the fund previously. Understand the role as a last resort and want students to go to other funding sources first. GSS does suffer a lack of visibility with students and those with the most need may not have good support networks in place where they’d get to find out about it.
Colum: Usually more international students apply, but in the last year seen more domestic applicants. In GSS survey, 82% said they wanted to continue to program. Have advertised this to grad secretaries, places like Brock Hall, Ombuds, so they should be able to refer.
Inti: Councillors should also feel free to tell people in their departments if you hear of students in trouble.
Colum: Yes, you should tell your constituents, but at the same time not every department is at Council. By working with Ombuds, faculty, Brock Hall, we can reach all students looking for help.
Jack: What efforts are we doing to make this fund obsolete?
Daniel: The range of issues people face causing them to apply for the fund are extremely varied. We’d have to be lobbying for pretty much everything because emergency could be due to housing, accidents, etc. Can’t target just one issue.

Tobias: Isn’t this better spent on advocacy campaigns to help make the fund obsolete?

Elizabeth: How many applications are being received now? Wouldn’t limiting the applications to 2-3 times per year undermine the emergency aspect of it?

Daniel: It’s about administration of the fund. Frequency of applications is random, but we tend to see 1-2 per month. In response to whether to spend it on lobbying, we wouldn’t be able to help students coming to us with emergencies.

Angela: Restricting fund payouts might be hard if you pay out all the money and then have none left for further applicants. How can we ensure equal treatment? What’s the role of UBC in this emergency fund?

Daniel: To date, we’ve never gone over the budget. We determine whether they have merit and then decide how much funding to give them. Committee wants to make sure people make it to graduation, so we have supervisor have to sign off on completion timeline. We can also give partial award and allow them to re-apply later for more showing progress towards completion. UBC has policy 72.

Sarah: 1-2 applications per month doesn’t seem like a big administrative burden.

Daniel: Each application is time not spent on lobbying.

Lena: If it’s not open for ad hoc applications, not really responsive to emergencies. Would you say it’s a first-come, first-served fund?

Daniel: It’s not first-come, first-served at present, but only if enough funding is granted. If not, then it is bound to run out and will be like that.

Lena: This is not for academic expenses right? Only emergency living expenses?

Daniel: Yes.

Bahzad: If there’s an emergency, why does it have to be near graduation? Not the only time emergency can come up.

Daniel: Not sure, since wasn’t around when fund was created.

Bahzad: Would like to suggest that it’s open to all students in need to apply at any time.

Colum: Reason it’s for the end of degree is because we’re giving money collected from all students and giving lots to one person. If you do it during the degree, you don’t know if there’s an outcome involved, they might still not graduate. We have a problem where we don’t track outcomes of grantees. We should maybe look more in depth at how other students do it, maybe have a dedicated student fee that goes into this. Should also have UBC administer it – have been on Ac/Ex a long time but committee membership changes and have seen different people make very different decisions. We do need to look at number of applicants and track them better. Policy 72 only applies to domestic students, 30% of UBC grad students are international.

Elizabeth: Instead of accepting applications all the time, why not 12 times per year?

Lena: The further you are into your degree, the less funding you have available. People past year 4 might be more desperate.
